AT THE TIME OF GIANTS

Colin

There are experiences that cannot be forgotten especially when it concerns a lost golden age. There are times of the earth that were splendid beauties, civilisations where greatness was measured in realizations and in gigantic sizes and that goes for the humans as much as the extraterrestrial creators.

In 2003, I had received a text regarding extraterrestrial beings who had to intervene in our solar system after a series of disasters that had begun to affect greatly their world as they were of such great extent. According to them, their world was threatened of a definite decline if the perturbations coming from numerous wars in this system and the use of destructive arms at the planetary scale would not cease.

Here is an extract of the story of an extraterrestrial entity called Naja contained in my text 'Our creators, the extraterrestrials' available free of charge with this link:

Up to the day, when around two hundred thousand years ago, your world along with its planets entered in contact with ours. Two levels of frequencies, two densities that were ignoring each other until some waves of opposite force came to disrupt our civilization. In our evolution, in wanting to control the ill-fated influences in provenance from the exterior universe, we had created an empire highly stable but also highly refined. Without wanting to, we had become highly particularized, therefore fragile to the opposite unknown. We were, excuse the comparison, like your animals locked in permanence in buildings that you make totally artificial, unable to survive in the exterior. It is the acknowledgment that we make today, but at that time it was perceived as a sudden aggression, unexpected and especially negative.

My original world, a splendor of our galaxy, my pride, was in decadence because of a backward world. Why was this encounter needed between two universes in antipodes? Some waves of low frequencies started to surge on our civilization and our resplendent light emptied itself of its essence. Can you imagine two worlds in extreme opposite that interpenetrate each other in being subjected to the shock of this divergence too big?

Your solar system started to draw the energy from our universe. Because, at first, of some holes, some empty spaces provoked by nuclear explosions that would draw all the energies around. Then, by some immense imbalances created a long time ago by the destructive behaviour of many races including the martians. This is comparable to standing near a being highly depressive who will end up by draining you of your positive energy. The opposites fill each other mutually. And if they are at the extreme opposite of the pendulum, the shock can be catastrophic.

My world of origin was far and at the same time very near yours. The distances are relative to your understanding. A pain to your foot affects instantly your whole organism. This only takes one fraction of time barely measurable to provoke a reaction coming from your brain which is still at the other end of your universe. It is the same in the entire universe which is a divine body in formation.

I lived more than two hundred thousand years in that idyllic universe before... your world came in collision with ours. With the interpenetration of our two worlds, more than two hundred thousand years ago, some unpredictable vibrations, some shock waves disturbed and devastated our universe. At first it was perceived as a calamity, endangering even our civilization. It was during that troubled period that I started to travel through your universe to understand the problem and look for some solutions.

It isn't rare that certain implantations of races on young planets turn badly and make their world sterile. The confines of the universe serve to experiment, to try some new prototypes with all the risks that this involves. Even if a new form of life seems promising and has passed all the tests of viability in a laboratory, it remains the ultimate trial of the natural environment where it will be transplanted. Even if we use currents of growth to stimulate the progressive consciousness, it can happen that a species degenerates. This can go as far as its complete self-destruction and also the destruction of its immediate environment. This choice will be respected. But if this cancellation implies a vaster entirety, it is at that moment that the elders decree a circumscription limiting the damages.

Your world was in the past the cause of many troubles. Before Earth, before Mars, before Jupiter, before Saturn, before Uranus; all these worlds issued from your sun have sheltered life, consciousness. In the resemblance of the first source, each star engenders planets, which in moving away from it are apt to receive some forms of life that are more and more dense in matter and rare in energy. The position of each planet in space, in relation to the sun, is the first condition that particularizes its inhabitants.

Therefore, one race has degenerated from one planet to the other to reach a culminating point on Mars. One planet was destroyed by some clumsy actions and Mars came close to being submitted to the same fate. The inhabitants of Mars rapidly destroyed almost all of its environment and now covet the richness of the earth. So much violence, pillage and destruction provoking only desolation, death and chaos. How far could this chain reaction go?

Our organism was affected by certain low frequencies, slowing down our time of reaction, our consciousness itself. It was like we were invaded by a state of torpor. Our gestures deriving from our thoughts, collapsed into a paralyzing heaviness. To better understand us, it's like, if from one day to the next, an exterior element came to slow down your cardiac rythm and your respiratory rythm in a significative manner. Your whole metabolism, your vital rythm itself and your whole civilization which derive from it, would be turned upside down. The chain perturbations would be uncontrollable. This is what happened to our world.

Colin

The content of this last paragraph concerning the effects of low frequencies on bodies was incomprehensible at the time I had received that text. It was only recently, while reading on the possible effects of environmental changes on the organism, that I really understood their meaning. Starting from these discoveries and new reflections that ensued, I asked Naja to talk about this fabulous period where the conditions of the earth favored the proliferation of giants. It is up to you to either see only a pretty fable or a chapter of our real history.

Naja

During a more or less long period situated before the last 200 thousand years of your calendar, a team of collaborators had reorganized your planetary system so that it was again viable according to the fundamental mechanisms of the universe. A new implantation of plant life, more conducive to the evolution, followed with a new range of animals guarantor of a secure environment were deposited on earth. About a little more than 150 thousand years ago of your calendar, other collaborators brought at last a first humanoid race; meaning capable of prolonging itself individually (reincarnate) and create a civilisation. I will not tell the story of this first race that you call cro-magnon nor its destiny because I have already done it in other writings. I will only mention that, after many millenniums, it did not fulfill really its original mission and degenerated slowly to the despair of their creators.

It is while facing this partial failure that I decided to intervene personally on this planet. I reached an agreement with a team of geneticists that worked at that moment on the creation of a new humanoid prototype more performing than what was done before. We would bring a certain number of these specimens on earth with the intention of testing them down here even if they had not undergone all the usual recommended tests. It meant going against instructions in force at that time but I put forward that there was an urgency to save our civilisation. I was blinding myself a little from the truth because the urgency was already far behind us.

Therefore, about 35 thousand years ago, when I arrived on this blue planet with all my team, I was bringing also a population of more than two thousand humanoids created carefully in our laboratories. This race was somewhat tested in an environment similar to earth but had not undergone all the usual recommended tests in this instance. The reason for these derogations was always the urgency of the situation, our civilisation was in peril. We had the hope of raising the vibratory rate of this planet that you call earth which had become, with time, hostile at first sight. All ulterior attempts to develop a healthy and evolved life down here had more or less failed. I will not tell here the whole story of your planet before its last two hundred thousand years even if it would be possible for me to have access to this information. My real implication in this sector does not go further. We then had to reorganize again the plant, animal and then humanoid reigns. This included the elimination with regret of species or units harmful in these three reigns.

We intended to create, with this new humanoid race brought, a great civilisation that would spread with time on all emerged continents of that period. All directors and representatives capable of occupying key positions were issued of my original race that counted a great number of giants; meaning 1/3 to three times taller than humanoids brought. Many interspecies breeding between my pure race and other extraterrestrial races had created this large diversity of sizes. The size gave an indication on the original purity compared to the founder race and the skin more or less bluish was a sign of high lineage, potential nobility. The size and colour imposed respect naturally towards all the remnant peoples of ancient colonisations still present on earth. Being a lot taller than the average gave also an assurance, a dignity and a physical superiority which we could not abuse.

In my world of origin, the big size was devolved mainly to leaders and had prevailed for a long time as an undeniable advantage. But it had played against us when uncontrollable waves of low frequencies, inharmonious energies came to slow down our whole metabolism, our pace including even the rhythm of life. It is the tallest that were affected first.

In my world of frequency, I was endowed with the faculty of being able easily to transform myself in the creature that I wanted according to circumstances. But my usual daily appearance was of a biped being of the reptilian family with blue skin and six fingers in hands and feet. This faculty of being able to transform myself at will was an acquired attribute by my ancestors and transmitted in my genes; privilege of a certain number of my congeners who belonged to a caste of leaders or at least to wise beings mandated to harmonize the components of our civilisation. Nevertheless, I was using mainly this attribute when I was called to intervene on other planets to resolve local conflicts. An official request from residents was necessary for my intervention except, of course, if there was an overflow outside immediate borders of the planet. I played for a long time the role of a mediator and also one who harmonizes between the differences. I took the appearance of a being who could best put at ease and reassure the inhabitants of a place in order to better intervene and find solutions.

When I came on earth more than 30 thousand years ago, I had to lower my frequencies to live in a more dense body, capable of functioning in this more materialistic world. My original world is not only elsewhere in another part of the universe but it is also at another level of frequency compared with the one of your planetary system. I then could keep certain attributes of my evolution but not the one to be able to transform at will or at least not directly. I could only induce in the mental of the other another appearance. To explain a little in what this consisted of, it is to create in its own mental an image of the wanted appearance, to integrate it in the whole body and then impose it to the mental of the other by altering the connections between his senses and brain. This does not affect in anything his perceptions from the rest of the universe. Like all faculty or talent, it is neutral at the point of departure. It's what everyone does with it that gives it a positive or negative intention. Numerous isolated races on different planets are not used to be around other beings with marqued physical differences. They have instinctive worries and often even aggressive reactions towards all that they do not understand according to their restricted criteria. Induce another appearance in the brain of the other turns out sometimes the only solution to explore incognito a world in depth or the only pacific protection when we do not want to use, in extremis, arms of defense.

From my part, I privileged on earth a physical size one third greater approximately than the new earthlings that were under my supervision so that there would be a certain respect and that it would generate a durable influence on them. In a first contact and then in a long term relationship, the impressive size, the physical stature have always had their impact. But the physical magnitude must be accompanied with an interior magnitude, a high morality and a devotion without flaw. It is sure that a certain pride and even sometimes an arrogance can accompany this size. But it is to each one to make it so that this privilege from ancestors cannot be an element to impose themselves by force or any other form of stress.

This last humanoid race created by us and brought on earth had an average height of 7 to 9 feet and could live for approximately 800 years because the conditions of the earth were favourable to a large size and a long life. These two characteristics are of course exceptional only in comparison to the actual time. Animals also measured in fact, on average, double the height that would possess their descendants. The oxygen level in a more elevated air, the axis of the earth less inclined and its rotation lightly faster favoured all these conditions. I stayed myself with this superior size during many thousands of years before losing voluntarily this particularity and take the size devolved to simple earthlings.

So, during a long period, a great size was the synonym of greatness of evolution and imposed respect due to the role of leader, wise advisor that was often attributed to them. It was also an image that we could describe as paternalistic. It is difficult to describe how we were perceived by populations. But, from our viewpoint, we would perceive ourselves as adults in front of children. We were full of tenderness and compassion towards the human gender but not devoid of a certain rigor and authority. The image of the loving but firm father when it means respect of common laws is quite accurate. A more colossal body would allow also to impose order, calm belligerent opponents in conflicts and protect also the weakest against potential exterior aggressions. There is a distant memory to most earthlings that a big size was at the origin synonymous of immortal leaders with considerable knowledge.

After a few millenniums, the last humanoid race also fell in decline. First, the longevity of approximately 800 years turned out miserably because after 200 years, their organism became lethargic even with exterior stimulations. The majority of its members became amorphous, unable to normal reactions up to even being non functional. That required a lot of time and enormous work from youngsters to take care of that part of the aging population that had become very dependent. Then, many attempts of genetic manipulations were done to reduce the general life expectancy. Two hundred years maximum of existence became a satisfying compromise. The planet earth seemed to dictate its laws. The behaviour of citizens of big cities surrounding residences of the elite, the cultural buildings and the commercial places were, overall, of a significant level. But the more we would move away from these centers, the more the environment conditions or life were rough. Naturally, the interrelations between individuals for survival were tense. There were problems of sectarianism, social inequality, power struggle. It had become impossible, my representatives and myself, to keep control always on a more and more vast territory. I had this vague impression that no matter what we would do, this planet had a fatal aura.

Then, one day, approximately 10 thousand years after our arrival, to retrieve the situation, an extraterrestrial race known by us for a long time came to help us raise the earthly race that you call homosapien, in decline. That race was yet bigger in size than us, the established leaders. With its skin very white and its red hair, it came to impose itself on earth displaying a great physical and moral superiority. In itself, they were very strong and proud beings but maybe a little arrogant also. They knew just the same to create great respectable civilisations admired by all. Native of a planet of our confederation, they had offered generously to raise the vibratory level of the earth that was always suffering from a heavy troubled past. As I already said, from my part, I have only known mainly the history of the last two hundred thousand years of that solar system and was implicated more or less in two principal transplantations of humanoids. I do not doubt that there were many other attempts of colonization of this new world before, such as I was able to read it briefly in the archives.

Upon arrival on earth, it was already announced and expected that the latter would undergo an imbalance of its axis which would result in great disasters approximately 15 thousand years later. I have forgotten the precise date but it was known at that time. It is difficult to explain but with all the undergone upheavals in this planetary system, the earth had not recovered from a violent shock that had led to the weakening of its axis. The inhabitants of the planet mars were mostly responsible. Every 15 thousand years, a cyclic unbalance would happen at the time certain cosmic forces were coming into play. We could have, up to a certain point, solved the problem but high-level authorities had declared to let the planet in that precarious state. They justified themselves by saying that this would help purify the earth in the case of another failure from our part. The concerns of a new vibratory decadence engendered by all forms of lives on earth stayed a major preoccupation. Then, in preparation of this event, when the sandglass was almost empty, several peoples immigrated towards safer lands, far from oceans, geological faults or too sensitive volcanoes.

A series of tremors of more and more strength occurred that went as far as make us vascillate on our legs before the great disturbance. The air was full of electricity and an odor of ozone was giving us nausea. From my part, I took refuge with my loyal collaborators in Egypt which was, at that time, a safe territory, verdant and full of promises. When the ultimate catastrophe occurred at last, in a few days, numerous islands were devastated by tsunamis or downright forever engulfed. Many coasts disappeared also while new lands emerged. But it was only the beginnng of a long journey because the implications were immense. The atmospheric perturbationss lasted hundreds of years bringing a hostile climate; torrential rain, drought, horrifying storm. It was a very difficult period for all races living on earth. An ordeal that seemed never to end.

Even the orbit of the earth was chaotic over a long period. Its inevitable slowdown that followed brought changes that affected intimately all living organisms. It was the beginning of the decline of many animal and human races starting with the one of giants. The earth had its atmosphere so upset that it lost part of its primary qualities including the lowering of its oxygen level. This led to the decline of all giant beings; whether it is plants, animals or humanoids. Quite rapidly, the tallest humanoids were condemned to the incapacity to work, think normally. At first it was the oxygenation of lungs that was impoverished leading to a slowdown of the whole system of the heart therefore including the blood circulation in the whole body. Their moves became awkward, clumsy to the point of hardly being able to move. The brain, badly oxygenated, caused them headaches and constant vertigo. This played on their moods that became irascible and unpredictable. A certain stupor settled down at first on the weakest then, with time, on the whole of the race. The inner intelligence and the ancestral knowledge of giants were affected greatly as far as being lost completely.

The earth as a paradise of diversified and marvelous flora and fauna was now only a confused souvenir. We forget too often that the characteristics of living organisms are tributary of a complex symbiosis with its environment sometimes stable, sometimes so fragile. Gigantism had been favoured and maintained by natural causes of which many had no idea whatsoever of this or simply had underestimated their importance.

Me, I had expected this drama not long before the catastrophe and I had succeeded in integrating a smaller and more resistent body to climatic changes. At that time, I did not have the faculty anymore of prolonging indefinitely in the same body as in the first days of my arrival on earth but I was forced to transmigrate from a body to another while however not losing track of my conscience. But this happened later on. Many of us had taken the care of transporting their archives and technologies in safe places for future generations. But, there was only a part of this theoretical knowledge and practice which survived up until now. The extent of unexpected perturbations on such a long period was the cause of its destruction.

The repercussions on the planet kept on aggravating. Most of the plants became rachitic including those that fed humans. The crops were now very poor and uncertain. Among animals that did not survive, the last few dinosaurs of great sizes still living eliminated themselves. The most dangerous for our race had been eliminated well before, upon our arrival. I do not go into detail on this subject because it would contradict the dates of your experts. But what I want to say is that the references of time of your scientifics should be a lot shorter. I had also warned the leaders of the giant people of the involved risks but I was not really taken seriously except by a few. Unfortunately, the pride of many contributed to their loss.

The more years passed, the more humans were discouraged from not seeing the end of this chaotic and unpredictable climate that made life conditions so difficult. Most could only talk about survival. The majority of people living on this deteriorated planet on such a long period was only considering the future with pessimism. The leading elite that subsisted with great difficulty and possessed only a part of knowledge of our ancestors could not stay insensitive to their repeated complaints. A major solution was required by populations because they still had an outdated perception that the great of this world possessed divine illimitied powers. Unfortunately, our technicians capable to maintain and make work our technological devices were decimated and their knowledge was greatly lost through the centuries. It was still decided to embark on a colossal project but jointly with a third extraterrestrial caring race that possessed the missing technology.

The solution of great extent that was proposed and accepted by all consisted in the construction of a series of pyramids throughout the world along the particular belt located on sensitive veins of the planet. Their roles would be to capt energy currents of the cosmos, concentrate them and direct them to the heart of the earth and this way, stabilize its axis by their strategic positions. It was already known and planned by our scientists that in 15 thousand years approximately, the axis of the earth would undergo the same upheaval.

It was really the role of pyramids at their origin to capture cosmic energies present in the ambient air to concentrate and instill them into the veins of the earth and this way stabilize it rapidly and for a long time. It is certain that we have included also in their structures a part of our knowledge and a message, a warning of a possible episodic catastrophe caused by the displacement of magnetic poles. All rotation in angle not perfectly vertical, as a spinning top that starts to incline more and more before falling over, the earth had undergone many falls of that kind in the past. This belt of pyramids (gigantic condensator of energy) were built with a system of anti-gravitational repulsion that allowed to end the project in a few years. A simple device that we could hold in our hands sufficed to cancel the weight of the blocks and be displaced at will. Another device made its contours melt lightly for a perfect adjustment. Whole mountains were cut and rebuilt while respecting the original location of blocks for a better efficiency. Some had an exterior covering that let the energy pass but retained it by its internal face. Others had in their center, a condensator quite complex provided with a sort of diamond with many facets. Even with the available technology, this project mobilized several people and was yet titanic for the era.

The climate could at last begin to stabilize and give back hope to populations. Though, the damages already done by nature and to beings, especially giants, were well concrete. It is those last ones that lost most in this catastrophe. The giants that survived at first without too many aftereffects it is those issued from direct crossing with humans brought on earth 15 thousand years ago. Nevertheless, their physical and psychological states had absorbed a hard blow. With the passing of centuries and especially with the new climatic conditions, the whole of giants degenerated at the point of becoming peoples more and more belligerent with aggressive reactions because of their slowness to understand the situation and accept new limited capacities. Many populations of size lightly superior compared to the one today prospered again but their descendants, by force of nature, shrunk progressively. The last real giants, unable to adjust, easily irascible became antisocial and solitary by the force of things. They even could fly into murderous rages followed by cannibalism for some. The latter are ogres of your legends, the sad weakened survivors of a race of giants from a splendid and glorious origin.

I lived through so many ages where I saw deploy growing civilisations, advanced and prosperous and then was a witness to their inevitable declines. The giants on earth, starting with me who had only a third greater than the majority of terrestrials up to those who had from three to five times my height, have coexisted during a long period with a mutual respect and the appreciation of qualities unique to each. The size was for a long time synonym of a great intelligence doubled with an indeniable physical strength. The one that was endowed with it had to make himself worthy by using his attributes for the good of all. In great capacity, there is great responsibility. But the memory of all this was lost throughout the passing of time. It only leaves from this grandiose period only gigantic monuments and the souvenir that outside a certain physical force, the former giants were only clumsy heaviness and bad temper.

It is one of my souvenirs that is the most vivid in my memory. I have inhabited and known the earth in only its period of its last thirty-five thousand years. What has happened before the last two hundred thousand years concern mostly exploration trips, transplantation of plants and importations of animals by my ancestors on a period of time that is less extended than what your researchers suggest. But I will not debate this here. I have not been informed that there were other attempts of creating humanoid civilisations before these last two hundred thousand years.

On the numerous planets I have visited or was implicated in along millenniums, I have been around inconceivable forms of life to your understanding including all possible sizes. Certain could be considered as gigantic measurable only in kilometers and others, so tiny that they were measurable in only millimeters; and yet endowed with intelligence capable to build civilisations according to your criteria. Beyond appearances, know how to detect intelligence, goodness, evolution of conscience; on bodies, know how to decipher traces of a whole history; in the eyes, know how to read the level of empathy, the recognition of the other, the openness to differences. We recognize the certain evolution of a being by its curiosity towards the unknown, not as a potential menace but, on the contrary, as a chance to open up to vaster, to grow in conscience.

Here it is! It was part of my story as I have lived it. Another who would have attended the same events could have told them differently according to his point of view. Many persons that encounter the same phenomena can tell versions with major differences even contradictory. But it is the proper of humans to have a palette of perceptions so large that it allows an individual experience very particularized. In any event, I cannot do otherwise than transmit my real-life experience from what my senses have picked up and kept in memory. I hope to have not given myself only a good role in this adventure.

I would like to thank Colin who allows me to express myself with a great opening and a great liberty of expression even if it is not always easy to use human aptitudes as they are possible today. I hope that my testimony is useful to your comprehension of your origin and legacy.

Colin

I have retranscribed this text as I received it from Naja without modifying it in any matter. I did not try to make it more 'acceptable' especially from a realistic point of view according to our actual official knowledge of our past. I repeat. It is up to you to either see a pretty fable or a part of our true story.
